I read through teh proposed guidelines. Nowhere do I See any relief for the person who takes out a slash compliance should they not be able to get the slash burned. IDL holds money and more importantly puts the liability for fire suppression costs on teh Contractor who signs the compliance. This absolutely needs to be remedied. I guarantee that many years the weather will not permit one to burn their slash and conform to the smoke rules. I have tried in the past and gave up because I could not get my slash burned and comply withDEQ good burn days. Either the IDL needs to change the law or DEQ needs to back off.
Is anyone listening out there?
